

Hank Havlin, PT, DPT, OCS

Physical Therapist

Hank Havlin has one main goal: empowering patients to return to the activities that matter most to them. Throughout the rehabilitation process, he focuses on equipping patients with the tools and knowledge they need to feel confident in therapy and in managing their recovery at home. Hank wants his patients to feel heard, to understand that fear about moving after an injury is completely valid, and to build enough trust to believe him when he says it is safe to move again.

Part of that perspective comes from his own experience as a patient. Following a shoulder injury and surgery, Hank worked with a physical therapist who helped him get his normal back. The experience inspired him to pursue the same path and help others get back to doing the things that they care about for as long as they can.

Hank earned his Doctor of Physical Therapy from Wheeling Jesuit University in West Virginia and is a certified Orthopedic Clinical Specialist (OCS). He is also certified in dry needling, a technique he uses when appropriate to jump-start recovery. He sees it as a valuable tool for calming irritated tissue and supporting the body's natural healing process.
